Extravagant eyes

While statement lashes are for serious spotlight moments, a simple strip lash can “open up” eyes and make you feel truly dressed for the occasion. This lace- and pearl-embellished set was custom-made by legendary Japanese make-up artist and Shu Uemura’s international artistic director Kakuyasu Uchiide, who created the looks on these pages. Shu Uemura, Napoleon Perdis Cosmetics and M.A.C all offer extensive ranges of strip lashes, from delicately coquettish to all-out feathered and bejewelled, which can be applied on the spot by the make-up artist at the counter. To apply them yourself, always curl lashes and use mascara. “Use it before to provide a base, then, after applying the lash, blend natural lashes with the false ones using another coat of mascara,” says Uchiide.

To prevent eye make-up heading south, set it by applying cream formulations such as a kohl eyeliner or cream eyeshadow and then powdering with the same colour of eyeshadow over the top. “Layering is key to the lasting power of all make-up,” says LA-based make-up artist Georgie Eisdell, who routinely preps Carey Mulligan for her red carpet appearances. “A cream liner or pencil should always be powdered afterwards if you want it to last. I also like waterproof mascara and liners.” ▶

Sublime skin

A smooth, plump complexion is the ultimate canvas for foundation. Jocelyn Petroni, skin whisperer to Sydney's social set, says the secret is facial oil. "The best skin preparation prior to make-up application is hydrating skin, so that make-up sits well without sinking in and emphasising dehydration lines," she says. "Exfoliate to slough away dry, dead skin cells on the surface and follow with a fine-textured hydrating oil and moisturiser. If you're in a rush, mix a few drops of oil with your moisturiser or foundation for a dewy, glowing finish, and after make-up application always spritz your skin with a hydrating toner just before you walk out the door."

Eisdell agrees that hydration is key and doesn't believe primer is essential, rather, it's all about a super-hydrating serum and moisturiser. "I use the Regenerating Serum by La Mer before applying moisturiser, so the skin looks revitalised and it evens out any fine lines," she says, adding that to make foundation last it needs to be stippled. "Use a beauty blender [a latex-free sponge] to apply your base and stipple the foundation so it becomes part of the skin, rather than sitting on top of it. Cream blush should be applied first, followed by a translucent powder, and then a powder blush to add depth and give more colour." Uchiide adds that blush should be tweaked according to the rest of your make-up: "If you want to focus on the eyes, blush should be a lighter finish in peach or amber. If you want to bring out your lips, choose the same blush shade as your lipstick, but it should be lighter than the lips."

Luxe lips

Nothing says festive quite like crimson lips, and this season's take is deeper and more luxurious than ever. Uchiide, who created the looks on these pages, says the new hue is a deep red with dark brown or plum undertones. "Red in dark tones like burgundy or plum expresses a very rich, luxurious image. Also, the texture must be matt," he says. He suggests first lining the mouth with a lipliner then getting your hands dirty – literally. "Your finger is the best tool," he says. "Apply it on the centre of lips, then blend out and around."

As for making that perfect pout last past aperitifs? It's all in the application, according to Eisdell, who recommends staining the lip first with a lip pencil. "I like to fill the entire lip with a pencil before I apply the lipstick. Layering and using a matt colour will always last longer than a gloss or a lipstick with shine in it. It's important that a bold coloured lip always looks fresh, so keep the colour with you and touch up regularly," she says.

To prevent leaving unsightly lipstick marks on your champagne glass, Eisdell has another handy trick. Simply place your finger in your mouth and close your lips around it before pulling it out. "Any excess colour will come off onto your finger," Eisdell explains. ■
